SOCIAL DANCING

Lynn Gobeille & Maurice Mancini

at ten or eleven
once a week
after school
we meet in the cafeteria properly attired
groups of boy and girls laughing, giggling and snickering until miss malmberg, the principal arrived amongst bows and courtesy's we fox trotted
waltzed
and even cha cha'd
but really this story has gone on for too long it is not about the dancing but the dance after the dancing it must have been winter class was dismissed
we clambered about the coat rack hats coats
gloves

social dancing

on taking down my facebook page

after reading
Sherman Alexie's poem
The Facebook Sonnet

Lynn Gobeille

Sometimes
facebook
was a blessing.
Sometimes
i felt "as if"
i was back in 7th grade, seated on a metal chair.... during
"social dancing lessons"
sweating,
waiting
praying

to be picked
to dance
before
the teacher
could / would pair me up with the
OTHER
fat girl
in my class.

my gloves
were gone gloves Lynn had taken my gloves
my memory has discarded some details the facts remain true
repeatedly to my request for their return she denied their possession seemingly taunting me with her denial I went home without gloves probably with hands in my pockets my own returning to school next morning Lynn greets me
here are your gloves
those are not my gloves
I retort
no bow no curtesy
no dance
a lesson I long remember
